The Disability Discrimination Act (DDA) 1995 defines “disability” as “A physical or mental impairment which has a substantial and long-term effect on the person’s ability to carry out normal day-to-day activities”. Long-term means the impairment must last for 12 months, or is likely to last for more than 12 months. Included in this definition is where the following is adversely affected:

- Mobility
- Manual dexterity
- Physical co-ordination
- Severe facial disfigurement
- Physical impairments e.g. asthma, epilepsy etc
- Mental impairments such as memory and ability to concentrate, understand or learn
- Progressive conditions such as cancer, HIV infection etc
- Understanding of the risk of physical danger

According to the Disability Rights Commission (DRC), “reasonable adjustments are changes made to working policies and practices and to the physical features of the premises, where they are substantially disadvantaging disabled people”.

There are many examples of reasonable adjustments, these include:

- Making adjustments to the employee's place of work
- Making adjustments to policies and practices
- Making adjustments to the actual duties expected to be carried out by the employee
- Flexible working hours
- Providing training
- Modifying manuals and learning instructions so they are understandable and accessible

As everyone is different there are no strict and rigid rules regarding reasonable adjustments. If an adjustment is not adequately made for an employee under the DDA guidelines then an employment tribunal can be used to decide whether the adjustment was reasonable or not.

Please provide details in the application form of any requirements that we need to be aware of and make provision for specifically because of a disability or impairment to assist you at an interview or in employment. Please contact the person on the covering letter if you need a reasonable adjustment made so we can discuss and try to accommodate the requirements indicated. If you need help in filling out the application form or need information in a different format please contact the person on the covering letter. Please note, if you are a disabled applicant and meet all of the requirements of the job you will be offered an invitation to attend an interview.
